My name is Hao-Yu Greg Lin. I am currently a Senior Scientist at Harvard University, Center for Nanoscale Systems. I graduated from Harvard Extension School in 2016 with a Master of Liberal Arts degree in Finance. Before joining Harvard, I was working in the industry for five years as a Research and Development Engineer. I was also a Senior Consultant for a few high tech start-up companies in Boston area. I have extensive experience working in both academic and industrial environment. I also have a Master degree in Solid State Physics from Columbia University in the City of New York, and a Bachelor degree in Electrical Engineering from State University of New York at Stony Brook.

When I am not working, I like to play piano at home, kayaking down the Charles River or travel around the world by train. My current professional experience trains me to interact with people with various cultural and technical background. I am running for the Director of Governance position at HEAA, and feel comfortable to assist my fellow alumnus. I believe my connection and familiarity with Harvard University administrative would be a great asset to HEAA.
